DEPARTURE FROM HOME-THE DISPATCH IN THE SOUTHERN REMISPRERE_"SAIL-ING THE SEAS OVER "-THE GULF STREAM-ITS CAUSE-A STORM AT SEA-LONE INLANDS IN THE SEA.

IFrom a wandering correspondent of the Dispatch. RIO DE JANEIRO, BRAZIL, ?

February 26, 1874. Soon after the arrival of the American mail steamer from New York at this port, a package was placed in my hands, which upon opening I found to be a copy of the Weckly Dispatch sent me by a kind friend. It was the first copy I had seen for four months, and the idea of once more enjoying a repast, six thousand miles from home-a repast that I had learned to look upon as daily meal for nearly three years-can be better imagined than described. In a strange land, surrounded by strange faces and listening to a language incomprehensi ble to Christian ears, I felt that I had found a friend indeed-one who carried me back to the days of Auld L'ang Syne—and I felt like exclaiming with the exile of llium, "Qua regio in terris, nostri non plena laboris." It is needless to say that I read every word in it, even the incomparable "bishops" of the worthy commercial editor.

As I looked over its familiar pages I was reminded of a promise I had made to write it a letter, and give some of the sights I might see in foreign climes. In compliance with this promise I enclose a short synopsis of an eventful cruise, which may not be un-Interesting to your many readers, particularlarly as it relates to a service which may, owing to a probable rupture between our country and a foreign power, whose inhumanity has so recently merited the execrations of all civilized nations, be called upon at any moment to take a more active part than mere speciators.

LEAVING HOME.

On the 9th of November, 1873, I steamed us to look after American interests in the describable. The night winds sigh, the breakers roar, and shrieks the wild sea-mew;
You sun that sets upon the sea, we follow in his flight— Farewell awhile to him and thee, my native land—

THE GULF STREAM.

The day after leaving port we reached the Gulf stream-that great river in the sea, which has been prettily termed the "pulse of the ocean." Its presence was indicated from the literal waters of the ocean, by large quantities of sea-weed floating on its surface, and by the temperature of the water. which was almost warm enough to cook an It is useless to state the many surmised causes or peculiar characteristics of this remarkable body of water, suffice it to say that it has been, and probably ever will remain, a mystery to the savants of the age. The most Probable cause, however, and the one which comes nearer the bounds of reason and philosophy, has been given by one of Virginia's noblest sons—the immortal Maury— Whose laborious research and wonderful genius has benefited the commercial world to an extent almost incalculable; and yet this great benefactor of mankind who has "blazed" the ocean as a highway, and with his "wind and current charts" has dotted the trackless waste with aignboards as plain and unerring as those of a turnpike, is denounced as a "charlatan," "an impostor," by those who were not worthy to touch even the hem of his garment. Between them the ecean intervenes, but water will seek and maintain its level, and here, therefore, we unmask one of the agents concerned in causing the Gulf stream. Moreover, speculate as we may, of this we are sure, that the salt which the trade wind vapor leaves behind in the tropics has to be conveyed away from that region to be mixed again with the other steel spring, being coated with hard rubber, light the waters at least, which we see running off through the Guif stream. A STORM IN THE GULP STREAM. This stream is known to all sailors as the great "storm-breeder" of the ocean, and it has been proven by facts that nearly every storm which arises in the Atlantic ocean strikes a "bee-line" for this body of water. Those terrific hurricanes which lave their origin in the warmer climates of the tropics, still "preferring to keep their feet in warm water," howl along this stream like so many demons of destruction. Here, too, those fearful cyclones or gyratory storms whirl in

through scatheless, for on the second day out the cloudy overcast of the sky, together with the warning of that little guardian angel of the mariner—the barometer—indicated the probability of a storm. We prepared for it, and fortunately for us that we did, for ere many hours elapsed one of those terrific cyclones, from whose clutch so few escape to tell the tale, came whirling upon us with the fury of a demon. The storm-king "Azrael" was abroad in all his wrath; but our noble ship was prepared for the struggle, for we knew it would be a fight for life or death. When the full force of the gale first struck her she staggered like a living being in agony, but soon recevering herself rose to the now mountainous waves, determined to do or die.

The ship was " hove to" on the starboard tack, with the wind from the southward and westward, which blew with a force that threatened at every moment to tear the rigging to pieces, while the huge waves, staggering like drunken men, hurled their sledge-hammer blows against her bows, and deluged her decks with torrents of water that swept everything not secured before them.

Landsmen have often looked upon a ternado sweeping in mad fury over the earth, levelling forests and crushing buildings in it wild eareer; but the seaman only has realized the effect of that greater power which comes from the combined rage of the wind and waves.

Such was the height of the sea, and so deep did the ship roll beneath the curling crests of the now increasing waves as they broke over her, that several times I thought it impossible for her to recover, but rising from her watery bath she shook the spray from her bow and "seemed to dare the elements to strike."

The scene was one of terrific grandeur, the white crests of the waves relling and breaking like so many avalanches of snow, threatened to engulf everything before them. Night soon came on, but brought no abateout of a port in the United States on board ment of the storm, which even seemed to increase in its wild fury. The inky darkness Thoroughly equipped, and destined for a closed around the struggling ship, and was three years' cruise in the South Pacific broken at intervals by the lurid streaks ocean. We left port just in time to miss which shot athwart the sky, adding a gran-"orders," which would have probably sent deur and sublimity to the scene almost in-

One of the most remarkable peculiarities of these cyclones, or rotatory storms, is that whatever course they may take progressively they invariably whirl on their own axis (in the northern hemisphere) from right to left, or against the sun-that is, contrary to the movements of the hands of a watch. This is also a peculiarity of all parasitical plants in the same hemisphere. Let any of your readers notice the running vines in his garden, or hanging from his house-top, and he will find them winding in spiral curves around their support from right to left-or, against the hands of a watch. They may be forced in an opposite direction and secured, but in a short time will inevitably resume by its sharply-defined edge, differing in color their former course. Such is the perfection of the Divine economy that the gossamer thread which hangs from the maiden's bower is governed by the same laws that rules the whirlwinds in their fury and guides the planets in their orbits.

Several days after the storm terminated we entered the "trade wind" region, and were soon "bowling" along with fresh breezes and smooth seas until we reached the "equatorial doldrums" or calm belts, which is one of the most disagreeable spots on the globe. The dense, close atmosphere is almost insufferable; it is refreshed occasionally by a thunder-storm, during which the rain pours down in perfect torrents; but a hot, glowing sun soon heats it again, and causes a degree of lassitude almost uncon-querable. Fortunately we steamed over these "belts," and soon arrived near the "line." when we were met by the fresh southeast trades, which brought with them a splendid temperature, refreshing and renovating beyond description.

On the morning of the 9th of December we sighted the Peuedos de San Pedro, or St. Paul's Islets, a cluster of five or six the petty, malignant shafts hurled at thee as steep rocks entirely free from verdure of any the towering peaks of the Andes are above kind, and almost white with the numberless the rivulets which murmur at their base. eggs deposited by sea birds.
